That, 90,000,000 years at least Before Garillas came to be. Th' Ascidian tadpole, young and gay, Doth Life with one bright eye survey, His connciousness has easy play. He's sensitive to grief and pain, Has tail, and spine, and bears a brain, And everything that fits the state Of greatures we call vertebrate. But ago comes on; with sudden shock He sticks his head against a rock! His tail drops off, his eye drops in, His brain's absorbed into his skin; He does not move, nor feel, nor know The tidal water's ebb and flow, But still shides, unstirred, alone, A sucker sticking to a stone. And we, his children, truly we In youth are, like the Tadpole, free. And where we would we blithely go. Have brains and hearts, and feel and know. Then age comes on ! A DISGRACEFUL SCIENTIFIC HOAX. cable reason; and latterly we find it generally held that they were either freaks of nature or relics of the Flood. These views especially prevailed with John Bartholomew Adam Beringer, a professor at the Univerty of Wurzburg, who, in accordance with them, instructed his pupils that fossil remains or "figured Prince Confound the man, why dou't be tirer?" stones," as they were called were mere ... " sports of nature." Now, some of his mischievous young students were of opinion that they; as well as nature, might have some sport in making figure stones; and accordingly they set to work and carved many curious and fantastic forms out of the soft limestone rock of the neighbouring hills, and buried them in the localities where the Professor was accustomed to dig for his fossil treasures. " His delight at the discovery of these strange forms," says Professor O. C. folio plates. Soon after the book was published, the deception practised upon the creof the glory he expected from his great undertaking, he encountered only ridicule and disgrace. He at once endeavoured to repurchase and destroy the volumes already issued, and succeeded so far that few copies of the first edition remain. His small fortune, which had been seriously impaired in bringing out his grand work was exhausted in an effort to regain what was already issued, as the price rapidly advanced in proportion as fewer copies remained. He died in poverty, mortified at the failure of his lite's work. It is said that some of his family, dissatistied with the misfortue brought upon them by this disgrace and the loss of their patrimony, used a remaining copy for the production of a second edition, which met with a large sale sufficient to repair the previous loss, and restore the family fortuned. This work of Beringer's, in the end, exerted an excellent influence upon the dawning science of fossi remains. Observers became more cautious in announcing aupposed discoveries, and careful study of natural objects gradually replaced vague hypotheses."-Chambers's Journal.

LORD BRABOUENE AT SMEETH PADDOCKS. To those who see in all accomplished facts a certain fitness, the elevation of Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen to the peerage will be grateful for a variety of reasons, one of which founded on euphony. In a musical age i was obvious that alman with a name which nobody could spell, and few pronounce, must bring himself into harmony with the rest of the world. Knatchbull by itself is not a pretty name, but it is good old Saxon, and speaks of long dwelling among the men of Kent. Hugessen is a foreign—probably Dutch name, and when spoken alone has a smooth. rustling, from from sound, caressing enough to the ear: but the two taken together are a little too cacophonous for ears polite. It is said that an unhappy foreign hotel-keeper once wrote the name of the late member for Sandwich as 'Knatchbulstugessen, Anglais,' in his book, where it still stands out like a monuthat ends well; and Mr. Knatchbull-Hugesthat seat in the Cabinet which he probably would have greatly preferred, displayed his own sense of harmony and locality by selecting the village of Brabourne as the place from which he should derive his title. There is peculiar fitness, apart from euphony, in the selection of this quiet nook in Kent, for the Knatchbulls are the prevailing family in their own district. There is an old rhyme, well this wise-

Not least grateful to the eve is a clump covered entirely with sweet smelling gorse, a splendid mass of golden yellow. In gradually building for themselves a pretty home in the middle of the estate, Lord and Lady Brabourne have always maintained the idea that their house is only provisional. There is a lefty knoll on the Scotts Hall domain which is playfully known in the family as 'the site'-not o dwellings that have been, but of the great house that is, or rather was, to be built in place of Smeeth Paddocks. From this pretty knoll Lord Brabourne will point out the spot. where a camp was held during the old

French war, the memory whereof is preserved in Barrack-field and Horse Barrack-field, and was treasured in the memory of an old gamekeeper of Sir Edward Knacthbull's, whom the military very nearly murdered during one of their playful fits. They left the Kentish athlete for dead after a desperate fight; but he recovered, and lived to hear of one of his assailants regretting on his deathbed that he had belned to murder Knatchbull's keeper. From 'the site' are visible numerous plantations of cliestnut and ash for hop-poles, a species of culture by no means | neglected by Kentish landowners, who, despite the nominally high rents of their property, are now in evil case, owing to the knack of tenants insisting on improvements in | Some indeed were, in the opinion of the beautifarm-buildings or reductions in rent. This activity has, however, like that of many other nimble brains, not always been directed in the grooves to which men commonly look to lead to fortune. On the contrary, the academic laurels which he culled at Eton and Oxford were of the scantiest. He seems to have anticipated, by the third of a century, the Eton Speech-day in which Greek was but little represented, and Latin not at all. In simple truth, he was, like mary agile-minded men, precocious. With swift perception be discovered that academic honours were leather and prupella to a man of his position in the world, who was also endowed with a keen relish for politics. At the Union he was a frequent speaker, and took part in the famous debate which was afterwards printed. In the intervals of languid study and eager debating he made jokes, wrote epigrams, and said 'good things enough to raise his college reputation nearly as high as that of the stroke-oar of the University boat, or the captain of the Eleven.

Is as chapel to cathodral and as lock-up to a prison. In opitables Lord Brabourne may be said to stand alone, his command of Hudibrastic chymes being quite peculiar to himself. 'Lord Romney' was once made to rhyme to 'come nigh.' The late Lord Stanhope, who defied the facile rhymer to make anything of his name, was met at once by

' If to heaven goes Lord Stanhope, Then may overy other man hope.' But the best epitaph of Lord Brabourne's is, beyond all question, that anticipatory one on another newly-made peer, which has been translated into Greek and Latin, if not into Hebrew, by admiring scholars. It appeared in the Owl, and commences: · Here lie the bones of Robert Lowe, A shifty friend, a bitter foo.

This clover squib, better in its way than even the anticipatory epitaph on the celebrated remarkable series of volumes, of which, perhaps, Higgledy-Piggledy, Tales told at Teatime, and Moonshine are perhaps the best known. It is a peculiar Yeature of these children's stories that they were what they professed to be, and were actually told in the schoolroom at Smeeth Paddocks, where the gigantie doll's-house still exists, to the amazement of beholders. The stories were told by the hard-worked Un ler-Secretary to his boys and girls during the children's hour, and were afterwards shaped and reshaped in the writing. ful Miss Hugessen, his eldest daughter, completely lost and spoiled by being written down. The original narrative became changed, and the pantomime, with which the story-teller embellished his work, was missed, of course. Lord Brabourne is not only a rhymer of sarcastic epitaphs and inventor of pretty children's stories, but an industrious essayist,. pamphleteer, and lecturer. Especially in the latter capacity his faculty of lucid exposition and picturesque treatment has stood him in good stead. In a remarkable lecture on Oliver Cromwell, delivered three years ago at Ashford, he characteristically referred to the idiotic kind of English history taught to young English people thirty or forty years ago. Abbreviations of Royalist scribes like Clarendon and Hume and Smollett made enough to be heard by the English Sailor-Cromwell a species of monster to Lord Brabourne as to Mr. Wills the dramatist, whom From his boyhood at Eton Lord Brabourne he assumed, from the evidence of his play of Charles the First, to have read nothing since he left school. It was a logical argument founded on the soundest evidence to be procured, but has hardly met with the notice which attended the publication of that funny story, the Boy with the Tail. From this constant activity and curious nimbleness of mind it will be inferred that Lord Brabourne is the most agreeable of companions. Strong on local history, he has at Smeeth Paddocks a library of commonplace books, newspaper-cuttings, and county lore, collected with infinite pains, and arranged with infinite industry. It may be said that predisposition to preserve printed matter to throw light upon individual character. It ter so much as its manner of arrangement friends the truth that one of the pleasantest of companious and cheeriest of talkers is at the same time one of the most methodical of men. His quips and cranks, his comic epitaphs and quaint parodies, may convey the idea of that clever neatness which stops short of genuine talent; but the carefully-arranged library, in itself a well-ordered history of recent events, proves amply that if the Upper Honse has gained a bright suggestive speaker, the House of Commons has lost a thoroughly well-trained and experienced practical po-
